

Open Worlds, Choices, and Jump Scares: Two Creepy Gaming Series for Fall 2019

The leaves are changing, school is in session, and the most beautiful time of the year is upon us: Halloween. In preparation for all things spook, we asked our staff gamers what they wanted to play this year. So pick up your PSL and check out with the two horror series we are looking forward to playing this fall.

Dying Light Series [<https://dyinglightgame.com/>]

Video game trends have built up to this sort of horror game, and lately, we are awash with open worlds chock full of nightmarish monsters. The Dying Light Series by Techland may be the most robust open-world horror survival gaming experience we've ever tried. With the second game scheduled for release in the Spring of 2020, now is the best time to pick up the original and get the bejesus scared out of you.

Our favorite thing about Dying Light is how much control we have over the open world. Our choices matter in ways both big and small. The "modern dark ages" make the humans you deal with as dangerous as the monsters that creep about by night. With fast-paced action and its share of jump scares, Dying Light is an immersive experience packed with replay value.

Spirit Hunter Series: [<https://store.aksysgames.com/products/pre-order-spirit-hunter-ng>]

Aksys Games is no stranger to creepy series with high replay value. This studio put out the Zero Escape [<https://store.aksysgames.com/collections/zero-escape>] series, after all. The spooky locations and shady characters that gave us the heeby jeebies in Death Mark are back in Spirit Hunter NG.

As is true with Dying Light, the Spirit Hunter series allows you to make choices that will alter the course of the game. Will you save your sister or will you find out what evils lurk in the streets the hard way? Find out with us when we pick up Spirit Hunter NG this October!

What gaming scares are you looking forward to this year? Let us know in the comments.

